If you have 'fallen out with' a family member, friend, neighbour or a whole group of people, there sometimes may seem no way forward.

This Saturday, former social worker, Peter Cluse, with a 35-year career in child-care social work, has agreed to share from his experience of how conflict can be avoided and agreements reached using Compassionate Communication.

Peter says that "Communication is a skill and skills can be learnt. The workshop will introduce a form of Compassionate Communication that has been used around the world to resolve conflicts. This approach helps people with strongly opposing views to understand each other and have outcomes which satisfy everyone."
